Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan has introduced a budget proposal that includes reforms to ensure the future solvency of Medicare. His proposal, which not affect current Medicare beneficiaries or anyone over the age of 55, would create a premium support system similar to Medicare Advantage, which millions of seniors already have. Medicare would up put a list of plans that would compete against each other for your business, and then seniors would pick the plan that works best for them. Medicare would then subsidize that plan. Poorer people and people who get sick more often would get higher subsidies, while wealthier people would get lower subsidies. Read Chairman Ryan's full report, "The Path Prosperity," here
